I met Joel in 1976 in Midland, Michigan when we were both colleagues at Dow Corning Corporation. We remained in contact through the years. Most recently, we were able to reunite in 2022 when I moved to Georgia and we had lunch together to catch up on our years of experiences together as well as mutual friends. Joel was highly respected at Dow Corning and was loved by his friends and colleagues. He had an unmistakable desire to bond with colleagues and customers and I shall always remember his friendship, depth of knowledge and kindness. Rest in Peace my friend. ROLANDO (Rolo) GONZALEZ

“ I have great memories of Joel as a good friend but also as a work associate with some career parallels that helped bind our careers as well as our friendship and maintain each well into our retirements. I graduated in 1966 with a degree in chemical engineering and likewise entered a career with Dow Corning. My first few years were at a DC site in KY, and like Joel, all of my first projects were in aerospace technology. By the late '60's Joel and I were working on projects with Boeing. Several of Joel's projects were related to early manned orbiters and space launch systems. My projects were related to aircraft, and altho these were different aerospace programs, the Boeing engineers we worked with were involved with these same programs so we would sometimes travel together for joint meetings. I still have vivid memories of that first joint visit. I flew into Seattle on a direct flight from Louisville. Joel flew from Midland to Chicago for a connecting flight to Seattle. It was winter and Joel's flight was delayed leaving Chicago. I arrived on time, checked into the hotel, had dinner and went to bed about 11 pm. A bit after midnight, my phone rang. When I answered, the voice on the line said something like "Hi Honey, did I wake you? Would you like some company? I know your room number and can come up, but we can meet in the lounge if you prefer." I was nonplussed and speechless. Then the next voice I heard was unmistakably Joel's, and of course he had cajoled the hostess at the desk into making the call. I did not know Joel very well prior to this trip but afterwards it was apparent time spent with him was going to be a good combination of professionalism and fun. That combination never changed right on into the occasions we were able to spend together following retirement. I always tried, during travels in the southeast, to stay overnight in Alpharetta where he lived for several years. It gave us time to again enjoy our shared memories and create a few more new ones. I now share the grief Joel's family feels at his passing.
